"We Bring Extraordinary Stories To Life"

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE to the Woodford Sun, Versailles, KY

Marvo Entertainment Applauds Woodford Community

PRINCETON, KY—October 24, 2011—A big applause is extended to the community by Marvo Entertainment Group LLC for coming out to support the "My Kentucky Home: Woodford County" documentary event. A large crowd gathered at CastlePost to learn more about the project and enjoy the entertainment provided by country music icon and Woodford County native, John Conlee.

As guests entered "the Castle," they enjoyed a time of greeting old friends and meeting new ones, exploring the magnificent CastlePost and its grounds, and enjoying refreshments while being entertained by the piano music of John Graul. County Judge Executive, John Coyle, attending the event stated, "The evening was wonderful and well attended. Our county always supports a good cause, and I am satisfied that this documentary will be one of the best because of the nature of our county and the spirit of our people."

Gathering in the large meeting room for the program, guests were welcomed by Ken Kerkhoff, master of ceremonies, who thanked everyone for their interest in the documentary and asked for their continued support. Special thanks were extended to the Woodford County Historical Society and Dona Wilson for their efforts in organizing the event along with CastlePost and Marvo Entertainment.

Kerkhoff introduced Marvo's executive producer, Sam Koltinsky, who told the crowd, "I love telling stories about wonderful people like you. Your support of this project will leave a legacy for generations to come." "My Kentucky Home: Woodford County" will be a signature project for Marvo, celebrating Koltinsky's 20th anniversary in film production. "The show will not leave the edit room until it is perfect," promised Koltinsky. Two of Marvo's team members, Patricia Fralick, assistant to the producer, and Seth Johnson, one of Marvo's rising stars who will be composing some original music for the show, also attended the event.

Koltinsky welcomed special guest, Tom Neff, founder of the Documentary Channel. Neff talked about how we are losing the art of the individual and the personality of a region, "and that is a very big loss," said Neff. "But there's hope. There is a whisper of individualism, and it comes for a genre that is as old as the motion picture camera itself—and that's the documentary." Tom Neff will be joining the Marvo team as associate producer for the Woodford County show, providing expertise that will enhance the quality and content of the project.

The much-anticipated evening finale featured the award-winning country music of John Conlee, accompanied by Steve Sechler on guitar and Mickey G. on keyboard. Entertaining the crowd with some of his classics and new songs, Conlee's music lit up the room as guests shouted out requests for their favorites. During the show, Conlee encouraged support for the Woodford documentary, donating the money given during the song, "Busted," to the project. For his final song, John put on his special glasses and delighted the crowd with his signature song, "Rose Colored Glasses."

Door prize winners for the event were Jan Meyer, winning a holiday at 'Tween Waters Inn, Captiva Island, Florida; and Bobby Dotson, winner of a bag filled with several shows from the My Kentucky Home series.
